The Corsair In The War Zone:

The Corsair In The War Zone Ralph Delahaye Paine,2024-03-18 Excerpt The task of the American Navy in the great conflict was performed exceedingly well but so very quietly that even now the merits of the achievement are realized only by those who knew how near the German submarine campaign came to winning the war There was no blacker period than the spring of 1917 when the losses of Allied merchant shipping were mounting toward a million tons a month and the Admiralty was well aware that England stood face to face with starvation and defeat unless this piracy could soon be checked It was when Admiral Sims cabled to his own Government from London Briefly stated I consider that at the present moment we are losing the war when Admiral Jellicoe privately admitted It is impossible for us to go on if losses like this continue and when Lord Balfour could see no escape from the same tragic conclusion destroyer as deftly compiled by George M Beatty Jr one of that dashing crew and published with the title Seventy Thousand Miles on a Submarine Destroyer This young man was heartless enough to print in the volume a ballad of his own devising which had such things as these to say of the author of this chronicle of the Corsair Grim Father Neptune has his throne In the Bay of Biscay all alone And on the day of which we speak He served out weather rough and bleak He sent us hail and he sent us rain And t was not long ere Ralph D Paine Did hie himself to the skipper s bunk And swear the writing game was punk Soon after the flotilla of coal burners came to Brest the whole scheme of American naval operations in France took on a new aspect with the arrival of Rear Admiral Henry B Wilson He was the man to perceive the vital need of expansion and to create the organization so urgently required Outspoken yet tactful with the hearty affability of a sailor and the energy of a captain of industry Admiral Wilson proceeded to build upon the surmise that the war might last three years and demand an American army of four million men The pulse of the service quickened and the response was loyal and instant It was not long before the executive offices of the Admiral and his staff in a tall building of Brest resembled the headquarters of a busy firm in Wall Street It
