McGuinness,2002 The author is a Catholic priest who has had experience in teaching and social work as well as parish ministry What he writes about is intended for the widest possible cross section of the community He is as eager to avoid moralizing as he is to share his insights Very often these reflections challenge a narrow concept of belief and encourage us to have a wider vision We journey into awe when we begin to see that everything is relevant to our relationship with God The author would argue that not only is everyone called to this deeper way of life but that in fact the majority of people are living a spiritual life without realizing it These reflections will deepen our awareness of this truth The book s divided into four sections The first two provide insights from reading the gospels and from approaching God in prayer Section three raises questions we may have in the course of our journey towards personal fulfilment The last section contains short stories or vignettes from everyday life written in dialogue form Be assured that the poetic reflections contain none of the difficulties often associated with the reading of modern poetry These stories and verses make for easy reading yet often their message is quite profound Since each reflection is unique the verses and vignettes may be read and hopefully re read in any order
