

Abstract: The authors have used a simple, reproducible model system for the study of the effects of environmental enrichment on human cognitive development. They have used a group of 100 children from a low socioeconomic background in a large, urban, inner-city hospital. The children were assigned to one of two groups: a control group and an enriched group. The enriched group received a variety of environmental enrichment interventions, including a structured play program, a reading program, and a music program. The control group received no such interventions. The authors found that the enriched group showed significantly higher cognitive development than the control group. These findings suggest that environmental enrichment interventions can have a positive impact on human cognitive development.
