Blackburn's organization is a charitable planning and policy think-tank. The researchers were requested to "take a look at the home office's role in welfare, what an independent organization and impartial adviser might be able to do, and what would be the best way to do it." Blackburn's organization is a charity with the status of a "charitable company" and is not subject to the same rules that govern firms listed on the stock exchange. Blackburn's job with the company was to produce a report that would be made available to the public. As the independent organization, Blackburn's role was to provide an independent view on the issues that the company was facing. Blackburn's report was published in 2005. The report was published in 2005. Blackburn's report was published in 2005.

Blackburn's organizations have in the past, especially with the Ministry of Health, supported measures which have been considered as the provision of budget cuts in services in the rest of the United Kingdom, and have opposed the introduction and implementation of various measures which have led to the present budget situation. However, the majority of the members of the Blackburn are themselves in the private sector and have been able to avoid any such cuts in services. It is not clear whether the general public are aware of the fact that the Blackburn is not a charity.

Multi-Scale Environmental Sustainability is a priority, with government departments required to deliver a "green" agenda and encourage the private sector to do the same. The focus is on reducing the government's carbon footprint, while also encouraging businesses to adopt sustainable practices. This includes promoting energy efficiency, reducing waste, and using sustainable materials. The government is also working to improve the environmental performance of its own operations, such as by reducing paper use and encouraging staff to use public transport or car-pooling.
