Chillers may be of any type, age, size, or manufacturer. System operation is simplest, however, if all of the chillers are designed to operate with the same leaving chilled-water temperature and through the same system temperature rise (temperature difference) across the chiller.

It is interesting to note that if the chillers in a decoupled system make the same chilled-water temperature, then all the operating chillers are loaded to equal percentages. There may be times when preferentially loading a chiller is desired. This is discussed in the section Chilled-Water-System Variations, page 54.
