These results suggest that managers' beliefs about the "right" information they will receive will vary systematically according to the number of sources of information. Thus, knowing that a manager will be getting the information via a telephone call is going to influence the type of information he/she is going to receive. In this study, we focused on the number of sources of information and not on the type of information.

Comments: 1. The intended function appears to provide the greatest cell-to-cell contact.
