1. The central surface of the eye is the cornea. The cornea is the outermost surface of the eye.
2. The iris is the colored part of the eye. It controls the amount of light that enters the eye by contracting or relaxing its muscles.
3. The pupil is the opening in the center of the iris. It allows light to enter the eye.
4. The lens is a transparent, biconvex structure that focuses light on the retina.
5. The retina is the light-sensitive layer at the back of the eye. It contains photoreceptors (rods and cones) that convert light into electrical signals.
6. The optic nerve carries electrical signals from the retina to the brain.
7. The macula is a small, specialized area of the retina responsible for central vision.
8. The fovea is a small pit in the center of the macula, providing the sharpest vision.
9. The vitreous body is a clear, gel-like substance that fills the interior of the eye, helping to maintain its shape.
10. The aqueous humor is a clear fluid that fills the space between the cornea and the lens, helping to maintain intraocular pressure.

Abstract

1. The first step in the process of creating a new product is to identify a market need. This involves conducting market research to determine what consumers want and need. Once a need is identified, the next step is to develop a concept for a product that meets that need. This is often done through brainstorming and sketching. The third step is to create a prototype of the product. This can be done using various materials and techniques, depending on the product. The fourth step is to test the prototype with a small group of consumers to get feedback. Finally, the product is refined based on the feedback and then launched into the market.
