☐ a vacuum

Sound Study Guide

What is Sound?

Sound is a type of mechanical energy that is produced when something vibrates. It travels through a medium in the form of waves. Sound waves move back and forth, carrying energy from one place to another.

Particle	Direction	Wave Type
Longitudinal	Parallel to wave direction	Compression
Transverse	Perpendicular to wave direction	Rarefaction

Sound waves can travel through solids, liquids, and gases, but they cannot travel through a vacuum.

Sound waves are made up of vibrations. The frequency of a sound wave is the number of vibrations per second. The amplitude of a sound wave is the height of the wave.

Sound waves can be reflected, refracted, and diffracted. They can also be absorbed or transmitted.

Sound waves are used in many ways, such as in music, communication, and medicine.

Frequency and Wavelength

The frequency of a sound wave is the number of vibrations per second. The wavelength is the distance between two consecutive crests or troughs. The frequency and wavelength of a sound wave are inversely related.

Speed of Sound

The speed of sound is the distance that sound travels in a given amount of time. The speed of sound is affected by the medium it is traveling through. Sound travels fastest through solids, followed by liquids, and then gases.
