Architecture Definition Document and Requirements Specification

by Roger Evernden

The Architecture Definition Document and Architecture Requirements Specification are two significant Deliverables from the ADM Development Phases (A, B, C and D).

They are then used to direct and guide implementation. Here we summarize what they cover, and how they differ.

Overview

These two deliverables are companion to each other, with complementary objectives.

Architecture Definition Document

A qualitative view of the solution.
Aims to communicate the intent of the architects.
Deliverable container for core architectural artifacts created during a project and related information.
Spans all architecture domains.
Examines all relevant states (baseline, transition, and target).

Architecture Requirements Specification

A quantitative view of the solution.
States measurable criteria that must be met during the implementation of the architecture.
Forms a major component of an implementation contract, or contract for a more detailed Architecture Definition.

Content

Architecture Definition Document
