professional skills lower than the importance of these skills in the job market. Smaller but similar differences arise for the other skill categories. Students generally gave higher nominal scores to the importance of all skills than were given by employers. When disaggregated by discipline, students in more technical fields (engineering, computer science, and IT) which are supposed to possess a high level of technical skills claim a shortage of these skills, whereas students from economics, commerce, and business administration indicated they were neither sound in professional skills nor the softer skills. Close coordination among all stakeholders through internship programs for students' development and timely revision of market-oriented curricula and special skill enhancement training programs are recommended steps to enhance productive youth employment in Pakistan.

Tense, overextended workplaces force managers to choose between results and relationships. Executives set aggressive goals so managers drive their teams to deliver, resulting in burnout. Or employees seek connection and support so managers focus on relationships and fail to make the numbers. However, managers need to achieve both. In Winning Well, managers will learn how to stamp out the corrosive win-at-all-costs mentality. Focus on the game, not just the score. Reinforce behaviors that produce results. Sustain energy and momentum. Be the leader people want to work for. To prevent burnout and disengagement while still achieving the necessary success for the company, managers must learn how to get their employees productive while creating an environment that makes them want to produce even more. Winning Well offers a quick, practical action plan for making the workplace productive, rewarding, and even fun.
