Abstract
The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The first session was a warm-up, the second was a cardiovascular workout, and the third was a strength training session. The program was designed to improve cardiovascular fitness, increase muscle strength, and reduce body fat. The results of the study showed that the program was effective in achieving these goals. The women who participated in the program showed significant improvements in cardiovascular fitness, muscle strength, and body fat. The program was also found to be effective in reducing stress and improving mood. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can be an effective way to improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

CONCLUSIONS The results of this study suggest that the use of a single, standardized, and validated questionnaire is a feasible and reliable method for assessing the prevalence of self-reported mental health problems in a community sample. The prevalence of self-reported mental health problems was higher in the community sample than in the clinical sample, which is consistent with the findings of other studies. The results also suggest that the use of a single, standardized, and validated questionnaire is a feasible and reliable method for assessing the prevalence of self-reported mental health problems in a community sample.

Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, at a pace of 3.0 to 3.5 miles per hour. The control group was instructed to continue with their current level of activity. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program resulted in significant improvements in physical and psychological health compared to the control group. The walking program was safe and effective for improving the health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
