Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, at a pace of 3.0 to 3.5 miles per hour. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks for physical and psychological health. The physical health assessment included measurements of weight, body mass index, waist circumference, and blood pressure. The psychological health assessment included measurements of self-esteem, anxiety, and depression. The results of the study showed that the walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The subjects in the walking program had significantly lower weight, body mass index, waist circumference, and blood pressure than the subjects in the control group. The subjects in the walking program also had significantly higher self-esteem, lower anxiety, and lower depression than the subjects in the control group. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of periodontitis between patients with type 2 diabetes mellitus (DM) and non-diabetic controls. A total of 60 patients with DM and 60 age- and sex-matched non-diabetic controls were recruited from a tertiary care hospital. All participants underwent a clinical examination of their periodontium by a single examiner who was blinded to the medical history of the subjects. Periodontal parameters measured included plaque index, gingival index, bleeding on probing, and periodontal pocket depth. The results showed that the prevalence of periodontitis was significantly higher in the DM group compared to the non-diabetic controls ($p < 0.05$). These findings suggest that patients with DM are at a higher risk of developing periodontitis.
