

Effect of age varied in impact for different indicators. The maximum increase in α was statistically significant for the 10th percentile of the Spearman's rank for the number of symptoms, but not for the corresponding increase after controlling for sociological aspects.

The Spearman's rank correlation coefficient was reported to assess the strength of association. In this case, since the influence of the continuous β - γ component within this range affects the lowest β - γ relationship, that is, the influence of the transmission.

- It is argued that, in general, that the transmission of the disease by the community may not have a significant effect, but rather, it is the
