

TKT: Module 3 – Teachers' classroom language

Overview: These practice materials by Russell Whitehead are designed to help with the Module 3 exam, in particular with the "Classroom management" section. In these materials trainees will think about how they use language when teaching and will consider appropriate ways of communicating with learners.

Part of exam: Module 3 ("Managing the teaching and learning process"); "Classroom management"

Materials: one copy of the worksheet per student

Time: 30–60 mins

Notes for teacher trainers

- One way to demonstrate some of the issues raised in these materials – and to have a lively session – is to start off your lesson (without explanation) in ways that "break the rules": issue instructions that are unclear, overly complex, etc. Appear to elicit, but don't wait for answers, and so on. Then you can discuss what you were doing wrong and how the trainees felt as a result.
- Set up micro lessons. Get the trainees to set up fairly complex learning situations. Have the other trainees observe, and make notes of exactly what the presenter says. Then have a discussion to review findings.
- Gather a collection of examples of teachers' classroom language. Try to include a range of functions and some good and bad attempts. Each one could be put on a separate slip of paper. Have poster-sized grids on the walls with columns for each function. Trainees mingle and attach the slips of paper to the relevant columns. The result should be quite a few multiple headings and overlaps. In discussion you can then focus on the importance of context, etc.
- Give trainees a series of scenarios – define the type of class and the functions to be expressed. Then get them to come up with lots of ways of achieving them.
