in our understanding of children's development in the arts. The author shows how this new model of children's development in visual representation has important implications for education. The author examines children's development in visual expression and suggests how this development might be supported. The book takes issue with the inherited wisdom about children's development in visual representation. The traditional approach describes children's development in terms of supposed deficits in which children progress from primitive earlier stages to superior ones until the defects in their representational thinking are overcome and they arrive at an endpoint of visual realism. This approach is the pervasive influence on curricular planning in arts education and in early years education. The author explains recent different models of development in visual expression. Instead of measuring children's efforts against an adult paradigm, the new models identify the modes of representation used by children as consequences of children's own intentions, motivations, and priorities. The writing is accessible and assumes no specialist knowledge of psychological theory, art's history, or interpretation. This book is essential reading for early childhood educators at nursery and pre-school level for other professionals who work with very young children and parents as well as students and tutors on early years courses. This is a revised edition of Helping Children to Draw and Paint: Children and Visual Representation originally published in 1994.

New Images of Thought in the Study of Childhood Drawing Laura Trafí-Prats, Christopher M. Schulte, 2022-10-21. This book provides a revitalised account of the study of children's drawing by outlining a departure from existing approaches privileging developmentalist accounts and presenting drawing as a specialised human endeavour separated from other material entanglements constituting children's everyday experiences. The book takes on current developments in the fields of early childhood arts and early childhood literacies to advocate for process-oriented, new materialist and decolonial approaches that reconceptualise the study of children's drawing. It proposes a future-oriented approach centred on thinking experimentally with a focus on nonrepresentational elements such as movement, sensation, intensity, rhythm, story, and place which singularly assemble in drawing events. Thus, the book discusses drawing as a process of sense-making that is not enclosed in the individualised body of the child and that unfolds corporeally in time and space. It revises the relation of drawing with symbolisation by suggesting that the use of language and signs in drawing form an entanglement with matter and sensation in processes of creative speculation connected with the movement of thought. Presenting a series of contributions by internationally recognised scholars and artists, the book aims to create synergies between theory and practice that speak of everyday realities, interconnecting children's learning and sense-making.
