Operation

Lifting a Load

To raise a load, the lift button must be depressed. Depressing this button will activate the pump motor. This torque is transferred to the pump from the motor through the motor shaft and shaft coupling.

Hydraulic oil is pumped through the system as the pump begins to operate. A vacuum created inside of the pump draws oil out of the reservoir through the suction line. Air which is drawn into the reservoir through the breather displaces the pumped oil, allowing it to be sent through the system. See Figure 6-2 and Figure 6-3. If the breather is clogged or blocked the ability of the system to lift a load will be greatly reduced.

As oil is pushed out of the pump, it passes through a one-way check valve to the lift cylinder. The check valve prevents oil from flowing back to the pump when lifting ceases, holding the lift cylinder in the raised position until lowered.

The piston will begin to lift the load when fluid pressure acting against it is high enough to overcome the weight of the load at rest on the hydraulic platform.

When the piston is fully extended to the end of its stroke or if the load is too heavy, pressure will continue to build until the rated pressure needed to operate the relief valve is reached. When this occurs, the relief valve, which is normally closed, is forced back against its spring, creating a path for the fluid to flow back to the reservoir.

Once relief valve pressure is reached, hydraulic oil will continue to be diverted from the lift cylinder to the reservoir until the lift button is released or electrical power is interrupted.

Lowering a Load

A load is lowered by depressing the lower button. When the lower button is depressed, electric current is sent to the normally closed external lowering valve, which causes it to change position and open a path for the trapped hydraulic oil to flow from the cylinder back to the reservoir.

Hydraulic Lines

1. All hydraulic lines must be thoroughly cleaned before installation.
2. When making repairs, use the least number of fittings and connections to minimize flow resistance and the possibility of leakage.

Hydraulic Oil

The hydraulic oil in the system performs the dual function of the power transmission and lubrication. Using the correct fluid is essential to proper system operation. Refer to Capacities and Specifications - Hydraulic Oils, for the recommended hydraulic oil to be used. Check the reservoir level when troubleshooting lifting problems. Low oil levels will make it appear that a problem exists with the battery or hydraulic system.

Clean

Adhere to the following precautionary steps to ensure that the hydraulic system remains clean.

1. Flush the entire system when a failure is encountered to make sure sludge, metal disintegrating shot, and debris are removed.
2. Filter each change of oil to prevent the introduction of contaminants into the system.
3. Provide continuous protection from airborne contamination by keeping the breather clean and serviceable.

Sound Level

Hydraulic system noise is caused by both improperly selected oil and loose or damaged system components.

- Hydraulic oil with high or moderately high viscosities - At startup, temperatures can cause pump noises due to cavitation and also impedes the release of trapped air. Air does not have sufficient time to purge itself from the fluid while in the reservoir before recirculating through the system.
- Aerated Hydraulic Oil - Results in system noise that is similar to cavitation. Aerated oil is caused by the ingestion of air through the pipe joints of the feed lines and high velocity discharge lines, as well as cylinder rod packing. Aeration can also be caused by oil discharging above the fluid level.
