

Drug Addiction in Teenagers: Smoking and Other Lifestyles

✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

In the first part of this assignment, the health problem of drug addiction was considered among teens and the most vulnerable group was established. Consequently, academic literature has been reviewed regarding evidence-based interventions and the most effective methods were identified. Finally, an appropriate health promotion framework was chosen for the future proposal. This paper will build on the ideas from the previous part, propose a specific plan for a health promotion program, detail the intended outcomes and suggest appropriate evaluation criteria for the outcomes.

Firstly, a formal rehabilitation establishment should be organized. The resources should be raised via promotional campaigns and additional government funding in the local community where there is high number of adolescent drug abuse cases. Simultaneously, information should be gathered by a combination of social workers, local community gatherings and online forms about all the teenagers that suffer from various drug addictions. When the amount of donations reaches an appropriate level, a large facility should be rented and refurbished for the purposes of a rehabilitation clinic. A number of professionals specialising in adolescent drug addiction, including doctors and nurses, should be hired from the local community or alternatively from the neighboring states using the same donation money. Kumar et al. highlight that the most efficient way to deal with drug addiction is the combination of "addiction treatment medicines with behavioral therapy," thus, the professionals should include therapy counselors and medicine specialists (2019, 38). Furthermore, the authors emphasize that "any attempt to stop using drugs will leave drug abusers vulnerable to powerful symptoms of withdrawal, which can put their recovery and their health in jeopardy" (Kumar et al, 2019, 38). Hence, the availability of a nurse in an advanced role that would supervise a number of youngsters throughout their period of withdrawal is necessary. Moreover, Hovhannisyan et al. mention Very Integrated Program (VIP) which identifies other unhealthy habits, such as smoking and drinking, which should be assessed in parallel with drug addiction. Finally, according to Wamsley et al., all the teenagers that attend the program should be categorized as those at risk of relapse and labelled with substance use disorder (SUD) (2018).
