Disposal of a battery into the air is a fast event, so immediately considering an inflating of a battery that results in an explosion is an overreaction. It is more likely that the battery will be damaged, and possibly leak hazardous materials. However, it is not recommended that you attempt to repair or reuse a battery that has been damaged or is leaking. If a battery is damaged or is leaking, it should be disposed of in a container that is capable of containing the leakage of hazardous liquids or gases.
