Answer: B
The patient is exhibiting signs of a urinary tract infection (UTI), which is a common complication in patients with indwelling catheters. The most appropriate action is to obtain a urine specimen for culture and sensitivity testing to identify the causative organism and guide antibiotic therapy. Changing the catheter (A) is not indicated unless there is a mechanical issue. Increasing fluid intake (C) may help flush the bladder but is not the primary intervention. Administering antibiotics (D) without a culture is not recommended.
