Marshall's correspondence is a richly detailed personal and public diary. The correspondence was important to him, as he wrote his close relations at home, and as confidantes, friends, students and invited guests, often on matters of social, political, economic and religious reform. His correspondence is a rich source of information on the United States, and has been used as a historical source for the United States, and as a source for the study of the United States, and as a source for the study of the United States, and as a source for the study of the United States.
