The Elements of Statistical Learning

During the past decade, there has been an explosion in computational and administrative tools, which have in turn given rise to massive amounts of data in a variety of fields, such as medicine, biology, finance, and marketing. The challenge of understanding these data has led to the development of new tools in the field of statistics and generated new areas such as data mining, machine learning, and bioinformatics. Many of these tools have common underpinnings, but no single treatment with sufficient comprehensiveness. This book describes the important ideas in these areas in a common conceptual framework. While the approach is statistical, the emphasis is on concepts rather than mathematics. Many examples are given, with a liberal use of color graphics. It should be a valuable resource for statisticians and anyone interested in data mining in context of statistics. The book's coverage is broad, from supervised learning (prediction) to unsupervised learning. The book's topics include: model selection, support vector machines, classification trees and boosting; the first comprehensive treatment of the topic in any book.

The major new addition features more topics not covered in the original, including graphical models, random forests, ensemble methods, least angle regression, ℓ_1 path algorithms for feature selection, cross-validation, sparse discriminant, and spectral clustering. There is also a chapter on methods for "web" data (e.g. PageRank) as well as including multiple testing and time-dependent data.

Trevor Hastie, Robert Tibshirani, and Jerome Friedman are professors of statistics at Stanford University. They are prominent researchers in this area, and Tibshirani developed graphical lasso and random forests, which are popular tools of the field. Hastie co-developed much of the statistical modeling software and infrastructure in R, MATLAB and commercial statistical software and within, Tibshirani proposed the lasso and is co-author of the best-selling text Introduction to the Statistical Theory in the Analysis of Data. Hastie co-wrote machine learning books including Support Vector Machines, Linear and Logistic Regression, and Statistical Learning.
