However, if your business interests have consistently been successful for years – but for some time all of a sudden you're no longer "financially successful" it's because you're not doing everything properly. Before you panic, you need to identify the reasons for your decline in profits. You can then investigate where the money has all gone and see if it is being allocated in a way where "the business investment goals" are being met. You can then do things like: look at the market segment you're operating in and see if you're not in it; if it is, are you priced, marketed and sold properly? Review customer base and retention; all these are key ways that you have available to additional funding. Check that investment for long-term goals and an additional funding source. "Financial goals" include all of the above, and you can use all of the above to achieve your business goals. If you're not achieving them, you're not doing them. The key to all this is to be able to identify the reasons for your decline in profits and the ability to make the financial decisions. (Source: <http://www.entrepreneur.com>)
