BACKGROUND

Energy in the United States

Energy is fundamental to life on Earth. We depend on energy for nearly everything. It takes energy to light, cool, and heat our homes. It also takes energy to fuel our vehicles, grow our food, and power our machinery and technology.

Energy demands are increasing. At the same time, there is growing concern about the negative effects of climate change on the environment and people. As a result, there is increased interest in exploring ways to harness energy from renewable, locally available resources.

From 2006 to 2030, total energy consumption in the United States is expected to grow by 19 percent.

In 2004, the U.S. consumed 100 quadrillion British thermal units (Btu) of energy:

Nonrenewable Energy Sources

Currently, most electricity in Florida is produced using nonrenewable resources. Fossil fuels, such as coal, petroleum, and natural gas, are nonrenewable because they cannot be replenished in a short period of time—they started to form millions of years ago and are still forming!

In 2006, approximately 86 percent of the energy consumed in the U.S. was produced with coal, petroleum, and natural gas.
