Abstract

Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized controlled trial. The intervention group (n = 15) participated in a 12-week training program, while the control group (n = 15) remained sedentary. The training program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The sessions included aerobic exercise, strength training, and flexibility exercises. The primary outcome was the change in body mass index (BMI) over the 12-week period. Secondary outcomes included changes in blood pressure, heart rate, and self-reported stress levels. The results showed that the intervention group had a significant decrease in BMI compared to the control group. Additionally, the intervention group showed significant improvements in blood pressure, heart rate, and self-reported stress levels. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can effectively improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
