Abstract

- Abstract:
 Objectives: To determine the prevalence of self-reported alcohol consumption among individuals aged 15 years and older in the United States, and to examine the association between self-reported alcohol consumption and other factors.
 Methods: Data from the 1999 National Alcohol Survey, a national survey of the general population, were used. The survey included questions on alcohol consumption, demographic characteristics, and health status.
 Results: The prevalence of self-reported alcohol consumption was 12.5% among individuals aged 15 years and older. The prevalence was higher among males than females, and among those aged 25 years and older than those aged 15-24 years. The prevalence was also higher among those with a high school diploma or less than those with a college degree or more. The prevalence was higher among those who reported being in good health than those who reported being in fair or poor health.
 Conclusions: Self-reported alcohol consumption is a common behavior among individuals aged 15 years and older in the United States. The prevalence of self-reported alcohol consumption is associated with gender, age, education, and health status.
