Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of risk factors associated with the development of periodontitis between patients with type 2 diabetes mellitus (DM) and non-diabetic controls. A total of 60 patients with DM and 60 age- and sex-matched non-diabetic controls were recruited from a tertiary care dental clinic. All participants underwent a clinical examination and a series of blood tests to determine their glycaemic control. The results showed that the prevalence of periodontitis was significantly higher in the DM group compared to the non-diabetic controls. Furthermore, the severity of periodontitis was also greater in the DM group. These findings suggest that patients with DM are at a higher risk of developing periodontitis and may require more intensive oral hygiene measures.
