Therapeutic drug monitoring of theophylline. Theophylline is a bronchodilator used in the treatment of asthma. It is a xanthine derivative and its plasma concentration is directly related to its therapeutic effect. Theophylline has a narrow therapeutic index and its plasma concentration must be monitored to avoid toxicity. Theophylline is metabolized by the liver and its half-life is approximately 8 hours. Theophylline is excreted in the urine and its plasma concentration is decreased in patients with renal impairment. Theophylline is also affected by drug interactions, such as with cimetidine, which increases its plasma concentration, and with carbamazepine, which decreases its plasma concentration. Theophylline is also affected by cigarette smoking, which increases its clearance. Theophylline is also affected by age, with higher plasma concentrations in the elderly. Theophylline is also affected by gender, with higher plasma concentrations in females. Theophylline is also affected by body weight, with higher plasma concentrations in obese patients. Theophylline is also affected by liver function, with higher plasma concentrations in patients with liver impairment. Abstract: This study examined the effects of a 12-week, 1000 kcal energy deficit diet on the body composition and metabolic profile of 10 obese women. The subjects were randomly assigned to either a low-carbohydrate (LC) or a low-fat (LF) diet. The LC diet was composed of 15% carbohydrate, 65% fat, and 20% protein, while the LF diet was composed of 55% carbohydrate, 30% fat, and 15% protein. Both diets were supplemented with a multivitamin and mineral supplement. The subjects were monitored for changes in body weight, body fat percentage, and metabolic profile. The LC diet resulted in a greater loss of body weight and body fat percentage compared to the LF diet. The metabolic profile of the subjects on the LC diet improved significantly compared to the LF diet. The results of this study suggest that a low-carbohydrate diet may be more effective than a low-fat diet for weight loss and improving metabolic profile in obese women.
