Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness of 10-year-old children. The study was conducted in a primary school in the city of Ankara, Turkey. The children were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The experimental group participated in a 12-week training program that included aerobic, strength, and flexibility exercises. The control group did not participate in any training program. Physical fitness was measured at the beginning and end of the 12-week period using a series of tests including a 1000-meter run, a 1-minute sit-up test, a 1-minute plank test, and a 1-minute flexibility test. The results showed that the experimental group had significantly higher scores than the control group in all four tests at the end of the 12-week period. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness of 10-year-old children.

Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized controlled trial. The participants were randomly assigned to either a 12-week training program or a control group. The training program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The control group did not participate in any training. The primary outcome was the change in HRQL, measured using the SF-36 questionnaire. The secondary outcome was the change in physical fitness, measured using a 6-minute walk test. The results showed that the training program significantly improved HRQL and physical fitness in the participants. The improvements were maintained at the 12-week follow-up. The study suggests that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness and HRQL of sedentary, middle-aged women.
