Abstract

On 12 March 2003, the Journal of the American Medical Association published a letter from the American Medical Association (AMA) to the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) regarding the proposed regulation of off-in-use (OUI) labeling for combination injectable contraceptives. The letter stated that the AMA had reviewed the proposed regulation and found it to be "unreasonable and unnecessary." The AMA argued that the proposed regulation would be "burdensome and costly" for manufacturers and would "interfere with the ability of manufacturers to market their products." The AMA also argued that the proposed regulation would "not be in the best interests of patients." The AMA requested that the FDA withdraw the proposed regulation.
