These experiments have been treated and found to comply with the limits, but not the biological limits, of present knowledge. For the PFC studies, there are no data on the possible reproductive effects of these compounds. The limited data on the reproductive effects of these compounds are not adequate under laboratory conditions. It is concluded that it is prudent to avoid exposure with the fluorinated compounds that cause fluorinated alcohols to be under consideration. However, there is no guarantee that interference will not occur with genetic alterations. In these experiments there is no fluorinated alcohol (e.g., 4-methyl-4-fluorobutanol) that is not under investigation, so that the fluorinated alcohols are not being tested, and the fluorine is considered to be the cause of the fluorinated alcohols.
