

Stickleback Lab: Evolving Switches, Evolving Bodies

SKILLS TUTORIAL 1

Complete Part 2 of the lab in the window on the left.

1. Looking at the pelvic score data, does the pelvic phenotype differ between Bear Paw Lake Frog Lake fish? Explain.

Yes, According to the graph, all fish in Bear Paw Lake have absent or reduced pelvic phenotypes, which means they have no pelvic spines. All fish in Frog Lake have complete scores, which means they possess pelvic spines.

2. After complete the graphing exercise, verify your data. How do your data compare to those obtained by Dr. Bell and colleagues?

My data reflected those obtained by Dr Bell and colleagues

EXPERIMENT 2

Complete Experiment 1 Quiz. Read the explanation for each correct choice provided.

3. Explain why the stickleback fish in Frog Lake more similar to ocean and sea-run

The reduced pelvic phenotypes have never been observed in marine and sea-run populations; the pelvic spines protect marine and sea-run sticklebacks from larger fish that prey on them in the ocean. Most stickleback in Bear Paw Lake have either a reduced or absent pelvis, while those in Frog Lake have a complete pelvis. There is little variation within each population, and the stickleback in Frog Lake are more similar to marine and sea-run stickleback.

4. In addition to predators, what other environmental factors might be responsible for the differences between Bear Paw Lake and Frog Lake stickleback populations? How would you test your prediction?

Fresh water is not rich in calcium and other minerals needed to form pelvic spines. we could test this by measuring the mineral content of fresh water to ocean water

After completing the quiz, click on Experiment 1 Analysis.

5. For this analysis, what is your null hypothesis?

My hypothesis is that a random sample of stickleback from a population will contain roughly the same number of individuals with and without pelvic spines

SKILLS TUTORIAL 2

1. What score would you assign to a fossil specimen that has only one pelvic spine visible?

complete

2. A stickleback fossil may show no signs of pelvic structures. What are possible sources of error associated with scoring the pelvis of such a fossil as "absent"?

Animals that are preserved as fossils may have been damaged by decay, as a result certain body structures may not be visible in the fossil

Start Tutorial 2. Continue scoring the fossil specimens until you are confident in your scoring abilities; then proceed to Experiment 2. (You may have to practice on 20 specimens or more before you feel you have mastered the technique.)
