DiPerna,Puiwa Lei,Jill Bellinger,Weiyi Cheng,2014 Teaching children to get along with others care about themselves and actively participate in learning are three of the most important outcomes of the schooling process Yet children in some schools are not achieving these outcomes and many educators have not received adequate training to create instructional environments that facilitate these outcomes As a consequence some schools have become places where children feel uncomfortable unsupported and ultimately uninterested in learning The genesis of ineffective instructional environments and underachieving students is complex and varies across individuals and schools communities Consequently the solutions to improving learning preventing or reducing inappropriate behavior and facilitating the prosocial development of students require multifaceted and sustained interventions The Social Skills Improvement System SSIS is a comprehensive program that integrates multiple levels of assessment and intervention to improve children s social skills and engagement in classroom learning The Classwide Intervention Program SSIS CIP is the universal component of the SSIS and it has been developed to help students learn the 10 social skills that teachers have identified as most critical to classroom success The purpose of this study was to evaluate the efficacy of the SSIS CIP using a Multi Site Cluster Randomized Trial CRT Specifically the authors hypothesized that children in classrooms implementing SSIS CIP would demonstrate improved social skills compared to children in non implementing business as usual classrooms In addition children in SSIS CIP classrooms were expected to demonstrate increased academic engagement during classroom instruction The study was conducted in two Pennsylvania school districts located in opposite ends of the state One is a small urban district while the other is a small rural district that is similar in size to many of the other rural districts within the state Specifically 6 schools 4 from the larger urban district 2 from the smaller district participated in the study Child level data were collected before and after SSIS CIP implementation in the classrooms randomly assigned to the treatment condition. Specifically, two measures were used to assess key outcome variables related to students' classroom behavior: Social Skills Improvement System Rating Scale and Cooperative Learning Observation Code for Kids. In addition, the Classroom Assessment Scoring System was used to assess the instructional environment in each participating classroom before and after treatment implementation. Finally, structured observations were used to assess fidelity of implementation of the SSIS CIP curriculum in classrooms randomly assigned to the intervention condition. Based on the results of this study, the SSIS CIP yields small to medium positive effects, increases in prosocial behavior, overall communication, cooperation, responsibility, empathy, social engagement, social skills, and intervention composite. In addition, SSIS CIP positively impacted academic engagement and motivation, suggesting there may be academic benefits from its implementation. Across all of these variables, the effects of SSIS CIP appear to be more specific to those children with more severe deficits in these areas prior to SSIS CIP implementation. Tables and figures are appended.

SSIS SEL Frank M. Gresham, Stephen N. Elliott, 2017 Social Skills Improvement System- Social Emotional Learning (SSIS SEL) Kathryn E. Bracy, 2019. The purpose of this study was to examine the efficacy of the Social Skills Improvement System Social Emotional Learning edition SSIS SEL Gresham Elliott 2017 on cooperative behaviors and teacher ratings of three first or second grade students with or at risk for emotional and behavioral disabilities. Two first grade students and one second grade student in a self-contained setting in a public school participated in the SSIS SEL over a 6 week period using a multiple baseline research design across participants. Cooperative behavior was assessed using momentary time sampling during a 20 minute observation when at least two participants were present. Participants' social emotional competencies were rated pre and post intervention to examine effects of the SSIS SEL on program effectiveness. Results showed cooperative behavior moderately improved by participation in the SSIS SEL curriculum and teacher ratings of participants' social emotional competencies were inconclusive. A discussion of intervening variables highlights the conclusion of this study.

Social Skills Improvement System Frank M. Gresham, 2008. The Social Skills Improvement System addresses the need for an evidence-based multi-tiered assessment and intervention system to help you help students develop, improve, and maintain important social skills. Designed by experienced scientist-practitioners Stephen Elliott PhD and Frank Gresham PhD, this family of tools can be used early in the school year to facilitate the universal screening of students at risk for academic or social behavior difficulties, help plan interventions for improving these behaviours, and evaluate progress on targeted skills after intervention. The SSIS focuses on key skills that enable the academic success of students 3-19 years of age. Teacher, parent, and student forms help provide a comprehensive picture across school, home, and community settings.

Utilizing Natural Settings to Reinforce Social Skills Instruction in Students with Disabilities Torrey Pitchford, 2018. A large proportion of students with disabilities (SWD) have social skills deficits that make it difficult for them to succeed in school work and life. This quantitative quasi-experimental, non-equivalent pretest-posttest control group study was designed to explore whether SWD can better transfer their learned social skills to natural settings improving their chances at independence and success with the use of reinforcement in natural settings The researcher included 86 students with disabilities from a school district in a predominantly white middle class rural Utah town The researcher and teachers used Social Skills Improvement System SSIS in this study to provide instruction in social skills to SWD The Social Skills Rating Scales SSRS are scales that were created to measure the success of the SSIS The researcher used these scales to determine the baseline data for each of the students and to measure the change in social skills behavior of the participants from the pretest to the posttest The difference in pretest to posttest scores of the control group was compared to the difference in pretest to posttest scores of the experimental group The researcher used an ANCOVA to determine if there was a significant difference in the amount of change in the pretest to posttest scores of the experimental and control groups upon completion of the study The results showed an improvement in the social skills scores for both groups after the SSIS program The experiment group achieved better results although these results were not statistically significant Future research should replicate the study while focusing on different demographics and specific disabilities The theoretical framework for this study was Bandura s social learning theory

Indirect Measures as Predictors of Social Skills Observed Through Means of Direct Observation
MacKenzie Denise Sidwell, 2017 The scope of the current study focuses on the relationship between direct and indirect methods of measuring social skills in children Participants included 33 children between the ages of 6 and 11 years old The sample drew from elementary schools in 2 Southern states in the U S as well as social skills groups from a university based clinic While some participants had been previously identified as having disabilities impacting social performance it was not an inclusionary requirement and the majority of children were not identified as having a disability clinically or through a special education eligibility domain Teachers and clinicians leading social skills groups completed indirect measures the Behavior Assessment Scale for Children Third Edition BASC 3 and the Social Skills Improvement System SSIS related to the participants social skills Direct observations of participants were completed using the Social Observation System SOS by graduate level research assistants Hierarchical multiple regression analyses were conducted to determine the predictive value of the teacher informed indirect measures on the direct method of observation Additionally simple linear regression analyses were conducted to examine the reverse relationship of the direct observation s ability to predict the variance observed in each indirect measure Results indicated that both the indirect and direct methods of social skills assessment can significantly predict the other However while significant a low to moderate amount of variance in the direct measure is explained by the indirect measures of social skills The results and implications of the finding are discussed as well as limitations and future directions

Program Effectiveness of a Parent-child Group Social Skills Program Heather Picciott, 2012 The purpose of this study was to evaluate the effectiveness of a social skills group program using pre post testing and focus groups Program effectiveness measurement was illustrated using data collected from a pilot parent child social skills building group program Raising Positive Thinkers The group involved four parent child dyads and ran for three consecutive weeks meeting once a week for 90 minutes to introduce practice and review social skills learned Quantitative data was collected via pre and post questionnaire using the Social Skills Improvement System rating scale SSIS Qualitative data was collected from a focus group at the end of the program Parent perceptions of the social skills group indicated the group was overall a beneficial experience for themselves and their children The pre and post questionnaire data did not yield significant findings whereas the focus group gave beneficial information for future replications of the program The use of both questionnaires and focus group was constructive in giving a comprehensive analysis of the effectiveness of the program Parent input was included for future replications of the program Abstract
