Course Description:

Social psychology is a science that studies the social psychology and social behavior laws of individuals and groups. This course focuses on three areas:

Study people's social cognition

It includes two aspects, one is the knowledge and understanding of others, also known as interpersonal cognition; Another aspect is the perception of oneself. The research results of social psychology on people's social cognition help people to correctly understand themselves and others in social life and deal with complex interpersonal relationships.

Study attitudes and attitudinal shifts

"Attitude" is one of the most classic research fields in social psychology and occupies a very important position in the development of contemporary social psychology. The individual's attitude towards things in society and others is an important part of social psychological activities. Social psychology should study the function of attitudes, the conditions and processes for attitude formation (change), and the relationship between attitudes and behaviors. These studies have practical application value for people to accurately understand the social psychological activities of others, understand and speculate on the social behavior of others, and help people change their attitudes to meet the needs of social life.

Study interpersonal communication

Man cannot exist independently of society. Individuals living in society must always have extensive contact with all aspects of society, establish various kinds of contacts with others, interact and carry out interpersonal communication. Interpersonal communication is not only a bridge to maintain and develop relationships between people, but also the basis and necessary condition for the normal development of individual psychology. Therefore, interpersonal communication is one of the important contents of social psychology research. Interpersonal communication studied by social psychology mainly includes: (1) interpersonal attraction, such as conditions of attraction, likes, love, etc.; (2) interpersonal communication, such as tools for communication; (3) Interpersonal influences, such as herd, obedience, compliance, suggestion, etc.

Darwin and the Emergence of Evolutionary Theories of Mind and Behavior Robert J. Richards, 2014-06-01 With insight and wit Robert J Richards focuses on the development of evolutionary theories of mind and behavior from their first distinct appearance in the eighteenth century to their controversial state today Particularly important in the nineteenth century were Charles Darwin's ideas about instinct reason and morality which Richards considers against the background of Darwin's personality training scientific and cultural concerns and intellectual community Many critics have argued that the Darwinian revolution stripped nature of moral purpose and ethically neutered the human animal Richards contends however that Darwin Herbert Spencer and their disciples attempted to reanimate moral life believing that the evolutionary process gave heart to unselfish altruistic behavior Richards's book is now the obvious introduction to the history of ideas about mind and behavior in the nineteenth century Mark Ridley Times Literary Supplement Not since the publication of Michael Ghiselin's The Triumph of the Darwinian Method has there been such an ambitious challenging and methodologically self-conscious interpretation of the rise and development and evolutionary theories and Darwin's role therein John C Greene Science His book triumphantly achieves the goal of all great scholarship it not only informs us but shows us why becoming thus informed is essential to understanding our own issues and projects Daniel C Dennett Philosophy of Science
