Steven C. Fernandez, MD, Michael T. Jaklitsch, MD, Garrett L. Walsh, MD, James E. Tashiro, PhD, Charles D. Rodriguez, MD, PhD, John D. Mitchell, MD, and Joseph B. Sturgeon, MD

Department of Cardiothoracic Surgery, Boston's Veterans Affairs Medical Center, Boston, Massachusetts; Division of Thoracic Surgery, Harvard Medical School, Brigham and Women's Hospital, Boston, Massachusetts; Department of Thoracic and Cardiothoracic Surgery, University of Texas MD Anderson Cancer Center, Houston, Texas; Department of Thoracic Surgery, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Michigan; Department of Thoracic Surgery, University of Colorado, Denver, Colorado; Department of Thoracic Surgery, University of Illinois at Chicago, Chicago, Illinois; Department of Thoracic Surgery, University of Colorado, Aurora, Colorado; Department of Thoracic Surgery, Department of Cardiothoracic Surgery, University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wisconsin; and the VA Medical Center, Durham, North Carolina. Paper 1006-1734000.

Atrial fibrillation (AF) occurs in between 10% and 40% of patients after pulmonary and esophageal surgery. The occurrence is associated with increased postoperative complications, increased length of stay, and increased mortality [1, 2]. Although treatment of AF has been shown within the preoperative, intraoperative, and postoperative periods, the prophylaxis and treatment of AF related to general thoracic surgery (GTS) is not clear. Therefore, the Society of Thoracic Surgeons (STS) conducted an Evidence-Based Surgery Review Committee to derive practice recommendations from the literature.

What follows is an executive summary of the full guideline available at <http://www.sts.org/resources/pulmonaryandcardiothoracic/thoracicsurgery/guidelines>. The full guideline includes the complete introduction and detailed sections that fully supports the recommendations listed here.

Methods

Guideline members reviewed all identifiable published English-related to the prophylaxis and management of AF.

The review of thoracic surgery clinical practice guidelines are limited to peer-reviewed full-text English-language articles in English written for thoracic surgery. Abstracts, conference proceedings, and other non-peer-reviewed literature were excluded. The review included all published literature on the topic of AF, including clinical practice guidelines, systematic reviews, meta-analyses, and other relevant literature. The review process included the use of a structured review process that is the product of both of the evidence-based medicine process and the review.

After 1200 or more or selected papers related to medical AF and AF after cardiac and general surgical procedures. Publications for review were selected by guideline review committees in three areas: (1) prophylaxis, (2) treatment, and (3) management. Levels of evidence were assigned to each publication, and recommendations were made regarding each intervention using the American College of Cardiology/American Heart Association guideline methodology. The document was reviewed and approved according to the STS Approval Process for Practice Guidelines.

Guideline-based guidelines must not be viewed as absolute. Guidelines are intended to assist health care providers in decision-making by providing a range of acceptable approaches for the management of specific conditions. The ultimate judgment regarding care of a particular patient under specific circumstances must be made by the provider. There are certainly circumstances in which management that falls outside of these guidelines will be appropriate.

History and Risk Factors

Risk factors for postoperative AF include male sex, increasing age, magnitude of lung resection, magnitude of esophageal resection, history of preoperative heart failure, comorbid lung disease, preoperative episodes of all lengths of preoperative AF, and procedures associated with postoperative inflammation, especially dissection around the aorta [3, 4]. Reproductive, low highest rates of preoperative AF occur after pneumonectomy, esophageal resection, and after lung resection [5, 6]. After minimally invasive thoracic surgical procedures, the incidence of AF has been as low as 10% [7], to over 40% of all minimally invasive thoracic patients [8, 9]. In 2005, Saint Martinien and other described postoperatively associated to a wide variety of medical
