Phillips Oppenheim, 2015-06-26 Excerpt from The Cinema Murder A Novel With a somewhat prolonged grinding of the brakes and an unnecessary amount of fuss in the way of letting off steam the afternoon train from London came to a standstill in the station at Detton Magna An elderly porter putting on his coat as he came issued with the dogged aid of one bound by custom to perform a hopeless mission from the small redbrick lamp room The station master occupying a position of vantage in front of the shed which enclosed the booking office looked up and down the lifeless row of closed and streaming windows with an expectancy dulled by daily disappointment for the passengers who seldom alighted On this occasion no records were broken A solitary young man stepped out on to the wet and flinty platform handed over the half of a third class return ticket from London passed through the two open doors and commenced to climb the long ascent which led into the town He wore no overcoat and for protection against the inclement weather he was able only to turn up the collar of his well worn blue serge coat The damp of a ceaselessly wet day seemed to have laid its cheerless pall upon the whole exceedingly ugly landscape The hedges blackened with smuts from the colliery on the other side of the slope were dripping also with raindrops About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the
