The Coming of Cassidy Clarence E. Mulford, 2015-03-11 The trail boss shook his fist after the departing puncher and swore softly. He hated to lose a man at this time and he had been a little reckless in threatening to fire him, but in a gun fighting outfit there was no room for a hothead. Cimarron was boss of the outfit that was driving a large herd of cattle to California, a feat that had been accomplished before, but that no man cared to attempt the second time. Had his soul been enriched by the gift of prophecy, he would have turned back. As it was, he returned to the work ahead of him. "Aw, let him go," he growled. "He's wuss off'n I am, an' he'll find it out quick. I never did see nobody what got crazy mad so quick as him."

Bill Cassidy, not yet of age but a man in stature and strength, rode north because it promised him civilization quicker than any other way except the back trail, and he was tired of the coast range. He had forgotten the trail boss during the last three days of his solitary journeying, and the fact that he was in the center of an uninhabited country nearly as large as a good sized state gave him no concern. He was equipped for two weeks and fortified by youth's confidence.
