leaving his bag in the station master's care and buttoning his mackintosh to his chin he stepped forth resolutely into the rain to negotiate the two miles which separated the tiny railway station from Little Tracey. The downpour was incessant and likely to last through the night. The high hedges on either side of the narrow road were so many leafy cascades the road itself was in places ankle deep in mud. He stopped under the protecting cover of a big tree to fill and light his pipe and with its bowl turned downwards continued his walk. But for the driving rain which searched every crevice and found every chink in his waterproof armor he preferred indeed welcomed the walk. The road from Beston Tracey to Little Beston was associated in his mind with some of the finest situations in his novels. It was on this road that he had conceived The Tilbury Mystery. Between the station and the house he had woven the plot which had made Gregory Standish the most popular detective story of the year. For John Lexman was a maker of cunning plots. If in the literary world he was regarded by superior persons as a writer of shockers he had a large and increasing public who were fascinated by the wholesome and thrilling stories he wrote and who held on breathlessly to the skein of mystery until they came to the denouement he had planned.

The Clue of the Twisted Candles Edgar Wallace, 2018-09-08 The Clue of the Twisted Candles by Edgar Wallace. You must remember I am a Greek and the modern Greek is no philosopher. You must remember too that I am a petted child of fortune and have had everything I wanted since I was a baby. You are a fortunate devil said the other turning back to his desk and taking up his pen. For a moment Kara did not speak then he made as though he would say something checked himself and laughed. I wonder if I am he said. And now he spoke with a sudden energy. What is this trouble you are having with Vassalaro? John rose from his chair and walked over to the fire stood gazing down into its depths his legs wide apart his hands clasped behind him and Kara took his attitude to supply an answer to the question.
