

The Cop and the Anthem

INTRODUCTION

BRIEF BIOGRAPHY OF O. HENRY

Born William Sydney Porter, O. Henry was a prolific American short story writer known for his surprise endings. Sentenced to five years in prison for embezzlement in 1898, Porter published 34 stories while serving time, writing under the pen name O. Henry so that publishers would not know he was incarcerated. After his release from prison in 1903, O. Henry moved to New York City, where he began his most prolific period of work, and published an estimated 383 short stories in the years between 1902 and his death in 1910. Beloved by readers for his wit and twists, O. Henry's work was also often characterized by its realism and the attention it paid to ordinary people, including homeless men, police officers, and waitresses. In many ways his body of work is epitomized by the title of his second collection of stories, The Four Million. Responding to New York society man Ward Mulliken's assertion that there are only "Four Hundred people in New York City who were really worth knowing," O. Henry insisted that every citizen of New York City mattered to him, and that he wrote his stories for the multitude of people who lived there.

HISTORICAL CONTEXT

Published in 1904, "The Cop and the Anthem" is set in New York City, much like many of O. Henry's most famous stories. In the first decade of the 20th century, immigration into the United States, particularly into New York City, reached a high of 9 million, with waves of immigrants arriving from Northern and Western Europe seeking economic opportunities and an increase of quality of living. Despite this fact, many immigrants struggled to achieve the "American Dream" and found themselves homeless as a result of work scarcity. O. Henry lived in New York City at this time, and often found himself suffering among its inhabitants in order to draw inspiration for his stories, leading him to title his second collection The Four Million.

RELATED LITERARY WORKS

"The Gift of the Magi" published one year after "The Cop and the Anthem," is perhaps O. Henry's most well-known short story, and it features one of the twist endings for which the author is famous. The story tells of Della and Jim, a husband and wife who are too poor to afford Christmas presents for one another. In a moment of comic irony, it is revealed at the end of the story that Della has sold her hair in order to purchase Jim a watch-chain, and Jim has sold his watch to purchase Della a set of combs, neither of which they can use. Samuel Beckett's play

Waiting for Godot, while quite different from "The Cop and the Anthem," shares many of the features of O. Henry's story, including a focus on homelessness and comic irony. In Godot, a pair of homeless "tramps" spend the entirety of the story waiting for a man who never arrives, much in the same way that Soapy spends the entirety of "The Cop and the Anthem" chasing a goal that he can't attain.

Inspiration: O. Henry famously wrote about the dramas and plights of ordinary people who lived out their lives in New York City. It's often said that he would listen in the lobbies of which he stayed in order to eavesdrop on conversations and gain inspiration for his short stories.

Name Change: According to writer Guy Dawson, there is some suggestion that O. Henry formed his pen name from the prison where he served a five-year sentence for embezzling money—the Ohio State Penitentiary.

PLOT SUMMARY

"The Cop and the Anthem" begins with the arrival of winter in New York City. Soapy decides he must leave his bench in Madison Square Park, and get himself arrested so he will be taken to Blackwell's Island, where he will be given a warm place to sleep during the winter.

Soapy's first effort at getting arrested fails, his entering an expensive restaurant with hopes of ordering a decadent meal and being arrested for "insolency." When a waiter spots his frayed trousers, however, he is thrown off the premises, before he can even sit down.
