positive results of the program.

Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized controlled trial. The participants were randomly assigned to either a 12-week training program or a control group. The training program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The control group did not participate in any training. The primary outcome was the change in HRQL, measured using the SF-36 questionnaire. The secondary outcome was the change in physical fitness, measured using a 6-minute walk test. The results showed that the training program significantly improved HRQL and physical fitness in the participants. The improvements were maintained at the 12-week follow-up. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can be an effective intervention for improving HRQL and physical fitness in sedentary, middle-aged women.
