

States of Matter & Phase Changes

Notes

Substances can undergo a phase change when subjected to a change in temperature and/or pressure. A phase change is a change in the physical properties of a substance without a change in its chemical composition. For example, when water is heated, it can change from a liquid to a gas (boiling) or from a solid to a liquid (melting). These changes are reversible and can be observed in everyday life.

Key Concepts

- Heating / Cooling Curves
- Phase Diagrams
