THE GOAL OF THE COURSE is to attain an understanding of the fundamental principles of cell and molecular biology. This field is not only one of the most rapidly moving areas of the life sciences, but also one that has a major impact on all our lives because of its central role in biotechnology and medicine. We therefore hope that students will not only learn the basic mechanisms that govern the behavior of cells, but also come to understand the experimental nature of contemporary research in this area of knowledge and begin to appreciate the ways in which progress in understanding cells is being made. The course focuses on providing fundamental background information as well as providing insight into experimental approaches and recent advances. Therefore, emphasis is placed on both the "what" (i.e., vocabulary) as well as the "why" and the "how" (i.e., concepts) underlying such understanding.
