This paper is part of the main focuses LAP We contribute with a study of the e learning content design process based on a quality approach within French and Moroccan University Our goal is to propose a new model of e learning document design process Downstream following our research El Harrassi Laudati 2012 which has a particular success at the Global Journals Inc We found that access to an e learning document is still very limited Then we tried to understand the reasons by interviewing other actors involved in a document design process Upstream we have implemented a protocol three actorial based on a quality approach We detail here only the designer actor protocol Our objective is to experience feedback with designers about how learners perceived and used the document e learning in Sport So twenty interviews were carried The results of the study challenge the design process to the demands of mediation in the e learning context Indeed the study shows that often the question of the design is on backwards Instead of wondering about learners needs the designer strives to provide the latest and most sophisticated technologies that are not necessarily appropriate to lea e-Learning,
