Tattered and Mended Cynthia Ruchti,2015 For years society and especially the church required that we hide our brokenness and pretend that all was well even when it was terribly broken Now people have become comfortable with our tattered edges our character weaknesses our old familiar sins and forgotten that God doesn t intend to leave us in a state of disrepair God calls us to something other than the wild pendulum swing from hiding our scars to flaunting them Rather than resigning ourselves to desperately clinging to shreds of recovery or discarding the broken threadbare scarred relationships we can engage in the process of healing through Christ Jesus reclaims what we fear was damaged beyond repair His soul mend leaves hope where the wound once was And as we engage in the process of healing we grow in appreciation of how

God tends and transforms our wounds
