What is the largest land animal in the world? It is the giraffe. Giraffes are interesting animals. They have unique physical characteristics, habitats, and other fun facts. First of all, giraffes have a spotted pattern and can be 20 to 30 feet tall. Also, males are bold, yet females have fur on their heads. Giraffes live in the sub-Saharan region of Africa in savannas. Another thing that makes giraffes interesting is where they spend their time. For instance, they sleep less than two hours a day and eat more than 100 pounds of leaves and twigs each day! Male fight with their necks, which is called "necking". Clearly, giraffes are highly interesting animals.

How does food work? There are many ways food works. Food travels three ways. First of all, food enters a system from outside mouth and travels fast. For example, when two birds fight, food is transferred by competition. In addition, food enters the transfer of food through liquid or gas. For instance, when vegetables are cooked in boiling water, food is transferred to them by convection. Equally important is diffusion. Radiation is when food travels through electromagnetic waves. A good example of this is warming food in the microwave. In conclusion, there are many ways food can be transferred.

There are three vacations I went on that were my absolute best of all. I went to Hawaii several years ago. While I was there, I stayed in beach houses close to the ocean. I also layed under a beautiful, glim waterfall with my family. Also, I went snorkeling in the ocean and saw fish both big and small. One, Hawaii was fun! Next, I went to New Zealand to see a lake - not the first but the last. I also walked on a lake from group of islands called the Bay of Islands. It was amazing to see a place like as well. Finally, I visited North National Park in Canada. We took a scenic hike and admired the beautiful view. We also saw some

After no vacation was as good as visiting. All in all, going to Hawaii, New Zealand, and North National Park was the best I would like.
