Measuring Noncognitive Variables William Sedlacek, 2023-07-03 Co published in association with Big Picture Learning Measuring Noncognitive Variables Improving Admissions Success and Retention for Underrepresented Students is written for admissions professionals counselors faculty and advisers who admit teach or work with students during the admissions process and post enrollment period It brings together theory research and practice related to noncognitive variables in a practical way by using assessment methods provided at no cost Noncognitive variables have been shown to correlate with the academic success of students of all races cultures and backgrounds Noncognitive variables include personal and social dimensions adjustment motivation and student perceptions rather than the traditional verbal and quantitative areas often called cognitive typically measured by standardized tests Key Features include Models that raise concepts related to innovation diversity and racism in proactive ways Examples of admission and post enrollment applications that show how schools and programs can use noncognitive variables in a variety of ways Additional examples from foundations professional associations and K 12 programs An overview of the limitations of traditional assessment methods such as admission tests grades and courses taken Education professionals involved in the admissions process will find this guide effectively informs their practice This guide is also appropriate as a textbook in a range of courses offered in Higher Education and Student Affairs Masters and PhD programs Journal of Higher Education Outreach and Engagement, 2009

Beyond Outcomes Richard Haswell, 2001-05-30 Writing assessment programs help place entering and mid career students in composition courses at the appropriate level monitor the progress of those students and assist in placing them in writing courses throughout their undergraduate careers These same universities also have writing instruction programs which might include writing centers writing across the curriculum initiatives and freshman and advanced composition programs At many institutions though writing assessment is not necessarily considered fundamental to writing instruction and there is little communication between the assessment program and the composition program This book demonstrates that writing assessment and instruction programs may be successfully integrated The contributors analyze the development of the writing assessment and instruction program at Washington State University which is nationally recognized for its success In doing so they provide guidance to other institutions planning to develop similar integrated programs The volume argues that writing assessment and instruction should inform and influence each other that they should evolve together and that they should be developed locally By tracing the success of the WSU program the authors directly challenge the use of national packaged assessment programs such as standardized placement tests
