Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was conducted in a laboratory setting. The subjects were 12 sedentary, middle-aged women (mean age 45.5 years, range 35–55 years). The subjects were divided into two groups: a control group (n = 6) and a training group (n = 6). The control group remained sedentary throughout the study. The training group participated in a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The training program was designed to increase the subjects' aerobic capacity and endurance. The HR and EE were measured at rest and during a submaximal exercise test at baseline and at the end of the 12-week training program. The results showed that the training group had a significant decrease in HR at rest and during the exercise test compared to the control group. The EE was also significantly higher in the training group compared to the control group. The results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the cardiovascular fitness and energy expenditure of sedentary, middle-aged women.

- Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate variability (HRV) of young adults. The study was conducted in a laboratory setting. The participants were 20 young adults (10 males and 10 females) who were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The control group did not participate in any training program, while the experimental group participated in a 12-week training program. The HRV was measured using a heart rate monitor and a computer program. The results showed that the experimental group had a significant increase in HRV compared to the control group after 12 weeks of training. The increase in HRV was observed in all parameters measured, including heart rate, standard deviation of normal-to-normal intervals (SDNN), and root mean square of successive differences (RMSSD). The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve HRV in young adults.
