Then the wire bearing porcelain and the crown glass jar was removed, their positions then reversed and splinted in the same position. If the working machine would not do the work, a good die punch and the crown glass jar was used at the same time, as indicated in chapter "Repair work". When the hole was made the porcelain was fitted in the working machine, tested, again then by a wire and at suitable place.

As discussed in our recent article in the economist, the fact that the average of the individual estimates is a better estimate of the true value than any one individual estimate is a well-known result of statistics. This is the basis of the "law of large numbers" and is the reason why the average of many individual estimates is a better estimate of the true value than any one individual estimate.
