to give "a new scientific insight into the nature and magnitude of the risk" for small, locally situated sites in the United States. "Current science is inadequate to do it," says the report. "Further research is required to improve understanding of the risks." The report is available at www.nrc.gov/docs/2006/03/20060301.pdf. The report's authors say that, in the future, the Department should take on a comprehensive risk assessment of any given site. "There is a need for more detailed site characterizations that provide more detailed input to the risk assessment," says the report. "Further research is needed to improve the accuracy of the risk assessment." The report also says that the Department should consider a "risk-based" approach to site characterization, which would focus on the most important areas of the site.
