

Chapter 10: Statistical Analysis: Practice Test

- 10.1 (a) The variable has a quantitative (or discrete) value (e.g., years), and gender has a qualitative (or categorical) value.
- 10.1 (b) The variable with an interval or ratio scale is the number of students who have had high school or college experience. The variable with a discrete (or qualitative) value is gender.
- 10.1 (c) The mean is the average of the observed data values.
- 10.1 (d) There are two distributions called frequency distributions: the distribution over age with 10% quantile increments, and the distribution over time and location, and the resulting frequency for each category.
- 10.1 (e) The distribution is continuous (e.g., years) but mean is given for the entire 10 years, so mean is given that age, 1990.
- 10.1 (f) The age of the youngest child (or child) is the lowest observed value from the sample.
- 10.1 (g) The mean value of all individuals for the distribution over age is the mean value of the sample (the mean value of the distribution is not the same as the mean value of the sample).
- 10.1 (h) Among the distributions, I find the distribution over age (years) is the best.
- 10.1 (i) Among the distributions, I find age (years) is the best (the distribution over age is the best).
- 10.1 (j) Among the distributions, I find age (years) is the best (the distribution over age is the best).
- 10.1 (k) Among the distributions, I find age (years) is the best (the distribution over age is the best).

- 10.2 (a) The distribution is:

- (b) The data appear to be normally distributed (the mean is close to the median). Therefore, it is appropriate to use the normal distribution to estimate the probability that a randomly selected person will have an income between $20,000 and $40,000. The mean is $20,000 and the standard deviation is $10,000. The probability that a randomly selected person will have an income between $20,000 and $40,000 is approximately 0.4772.
- (c) To estimate the probability that a randomly selected person will have an income between $20,000 and $40,000, we can use the normal distribution. The mean is $20,000 and the standard deviation is $10,000. The probability that a randomly selected person will have an income between $20,000 and $40,000 is approximately 0.4772.
