Topic: Literature | Words: 385 | Pages: 1

In writing the short story “The Yellow Wallpaper,” Gilman describes the protagonist and narrator, a young woman giving in to a mental disorder upon giving birth. The author shows how the narrator being discouraged from work or any activities stifles and restricts her physically and mentally, only worsening her condition. Further, the narrator’s attempts to reclaim her interests and identity as a writer get suppressed by her dismissive husband, a double authority figure since he is also a physician (Gilman 11). Thus, the author demonstrates how women are disregarded both at home and in the larger society.

The author uses symbolism to show the toll mandated rest and idleness take on the narrator’s mental health. Since the narrator is restricted from other mental stimulation, she investigates and analyses the yellow wallpaper in her room (Gilman 8). At first, it is merely unpleasant stains, but over time, a pattern emerges, forming a desperate woman trapped
